ATTORNEY GENERAL MADIGAN LAUNCHES WEBSITE ON CHICAGO POLICE DEPARTMENT CONSENT DECREE

Chicago Residents Can Provide Input on Police Reform Through New Website

Chicago — Attorney General Lisa Madigan today announced her office now has a website that Chicago residents are encouraged to use to find information and provide input as part of the development of a consent decree for reform of the Chicago Police Department.

Madigan's office launched a new website, www.chicagopoliceconsentdecree.org, to provide information on the consent decree process and allow all residents to provide feedback about their experiences with the police department and how to improve public safety, which will help inform the terms of the consent decree.

In addition to the website, the Attorney General's office will be holding public meetings to hear feedback on reform. Information about those discussions will be forthcoming.

"Many residents have expressed their hopes and concerns about public safety and the Chicago Police Department," Madigan said. "This website intends to provide all Chicagoans the opportunity to understand and contribute to the development of meaningful and lasting reforms for the Chicago Police Department."

The Attorney General filed an August 2017 lawsuit to obtain a court-enforceable consent decree for the Chicago Police Department that addresses findings and recommendations for the department made by the U.S. Department of Justice and Chicago's Police Accountability Task Force.

Once a consent decree is drafted, Madigan's office will post the draft on the website to solicit the public's input during a public comment period.
