

A Message from Attorney General Lisa Madigan

In response to widespread recalls of children's products, my office debuted the Safe Shopping Guide in 2007. In that year alone, 44 million individual units of children's products were recalled. Thankfully, that number has decreased substantially in years since, but the number of incidents, injuries and deaths reported prior to products being recalled has risen dramatically.

So now, it is more important than ever for parents, caregivers and loved ones to be vigilant in checking the safety of toys, clothes, strollers and other children's products before purchasing them.

But with nearly 100 products being recalled last year alone, it is extremely difficult for any family to keep up with all of those items. That is why we continue to provide this easy-to-use resource guide for your holiday shopping, with photographs and detailed descriptions of the products recalled by the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission over the past year.

This year, we also included a special section focused on the secondhand market, which continues to be a major concern for product safety advocates. In reviewing the six previous years of Safe Shopping Guides my office has produced, we wanted to determine whether any of the previously recalled items could still be found for sale. Unfortunately, our informal review revealed that a number of recalled products are available on well-known websites like eBay, Craigslist and Amazon, indicating that sellers may not always be aware of recalls on items they have posted for sale.

Our findings point to just how tough it is to stay on top of this issue when you have children at home. Parents and caregivers must use caution when shopping for young children.

I urge you to take a moment this time of year to read through this guide before you make your holiday purchases, and use it to examine the products already in your home to determine if they may pose an unknown danger to your children or grandchildren. By taking just a few of these simple precautions, you can ensure your holiday season is not only joyous, but safe.

Happy holidays!

Lisa Madigan
Attorney General

Online Sales of Recalled Products

Online Sales of Recalled Products: Repeat Offenders

When a defective or dangerous product is recalled, retailers and manufacturers implement a standard procedure that quickly removes the unsafe product from store shelves and prevents future sales until a fix is in place. But, for the products that have already been purchased, it's up to shoppers to be on alert for recalls of items that may be in their homes or, more concerning, that are still for sale online at popular websites such as eBay, Amazon, Craigslist and eCrater. In developing the 2013 Safe Shopping Guide, Attorney General Madigan's office reviewed recalled product listings in previous years of the annual holiday resource guide to alert shoppers about products that have been recalled but still can be found at online secondary sales sites. Consumers need to be especially careful when purchasing secondhand products, as their sellers may not be aware of the dangers that caused them to be recalled through the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission. Here is a sampling of recalled products that may still be available for purchase online:

Harry Potter Bookends Recalled on September 23, 2008

50,000 Simmons Drop-Side Cribs Recalled on June 24, 2010

The drop-side hardware can fail, causing the drop side to detach from the crib. When the drop side detaches, it creates a space in which an infant or toddler can become entrapped and suffocate or strangle. Additionally, when the drop-side hardware fails or disengages, an infant or toddler can be injured by falling out of the crib. Slats can also detach from the sides of the cribs, posing a risk of infants and toddlers becoming entrapped or strangled, or falling out of the crib. There have been 30 reports of drop sides that malfunctioned or detached, and two children became entrapped between the drop side and the crib mattress but were freed without injury. Two other children fell out of their cribs when the drop side malfunctioned, and one child sustained scratches due to the fall. The cribs were sold at children's product stores and by various retailers nationwide and online from January 2002 through February 2007.
